A Group of Wounded People as a result of the Israeli Invasion on Lebanon

A colour photograph of a group of wounded people following the Israeli invasion on Lebanon in one of Cyprus's Hospitals. The photograph was captured following the Israeli invasion on Lebanon, also known as the "Galilee" Operation, which was carried out by "Israel" on the pretext of protecting the Israeli settlements in Al- Galilee from the danger of the Palestinian Fedayeen Missiles which were launched in the north of Palestine, However, the very main reason for the war was to extract the Palestinian Liberation Organization from Lebanon. A group of the wounded people were transferred to Cyprus and Greece to receive treatment in conjunction with the exit of members of the liberation's Organization and members of the Liberation Army who left Beirut.
